The current situation of the world is very frightening during the covid 19. Many countries are struggling or fighting this pandemic in their own way and preparing to take care of the damaged situation. National and International institutions strongly affected by Pandemic. The threat of corona still does not seem to have escaped the world. Just as it affects the individual's personal life, it also affects the state of the nation. It has also changed the behavior of nations. In this paper try to study on the topic that What exactly are these changes, what kind of changes can India make?

In the pandemic situation, one thing has become clear that what kind of Government is in which country does not matter. Whether it is a democracy or a dictatorship, any form of government has tried to make fight with Corona in a successfully way. Be it South Korea or a country like Taiwan, Singapore both countries have tried to manage the Corona in the best possible way. A country like Taiwan overcame the Corona without a single lockdown, with only 10 deaths due to the Corona. Taiwan used the health system very effectively, using the method of segregation without using the lockdown method. In doing so, the people were provided with very good facilities. They had to keep 1% of their population in segregation, while doing so, they used technology very carefully, keeping a close eye on all those people who have gone beyond segregation. Therefore, the type of governance is no longer important. It has been proved that the countries that have succeeded in controlling the corona need to have a competent health system. So how much flexibility you have given to your healthcare system in the future is going to matter. It is also part of a study of how many countries managed the corona better without lockdown. Many such issues have been tried to study in this paper.

IntroductionThe world after Covid 19*1) New model of healthcare system

Many experts have confirmed that India and all over the world will face a second wave of corona. Constant lockdown cannot be the solution to covid 19 because it has also had a bad effect on the economy. One thing you can learn from South Korea about this is that in 2019, a virus called MERS was spread in South Korea by camels. South Korea later made major changes to its healthcare system.

Given the extent and prevalence of the covid 19, many thinkers around the world have suggested that the world could be reconstructed as it was after globalization.

2) Autistic country

During the Covid 19 period, each country closed its borders to another, international trade was closed. Emotions of intense nationalism appear to have formed in every country during this period. The total population of the United States is approximately 27 to 28 million, but the United States stocks twice as many vaccines today. In the United States today, people are not ready to be vaccinated against corona, but they are shown a variety of decoy, such as free movie tickets, free beer after vaccination. Along with the United States, rich and western countries have started vaccinating children under the age of 12. Not only have the US entered into vaccine agreements with major companies, but the US behavior has been so bizarre that other countries have stopped providing raw materials for vaccine production. The U.S. had also stopped supplying raw materials for the production of face shields in India, but lifted the ban after discussions with India's national adviser. The United States has also stopped exporting vaccines to poor countries like Africa.

Many international organizations, such as the UNO, G-7 and the G-20, BRICS which were formed after World War second, played a very effective role in cooperation, but after covid 19, they seem to have changed their role. So, the question arises as to whether the liberal role of such organizations in the post-Covid 19 world will change. The role of the United Nations also appeared to be passive. Nations are becoming effective and international organizations are becoming ineffective, which picture was created in the First and Second World Wars. After Covid 19 there is the risk that the world could be yet more divided and nationalistic.

3) China's growing influence

China, from which the corona virus originated in Wuhan Province, does not appear to have been hit hard by the Pandemic, but rather China's trade or growth rate has increased. The World Health Organization (WHO) has also given a clean chit to China over the allegations against it. China is a member of the 15 committees of the UN, so China's influence in the world will increase after the post-Covid. From the last few years China has emerged as a great power competitor to the America, and their superpower rivalry is now playing out in the context of the global pandemic. In the midst of pandemic Animosity between the US and China intensified. Trump began to refer to Covid-19 as a "Chinese virus" in March, while his aides called it the "kung flu." American and British officials have repeatedly charged that China inhibited a concerted global response by withholding important information about Covid-19. Meanwhile a narrative began to circulate widely in China that Covid-19 was brought there by members of the American military. (Seth- Schindler- Covid 19-china and the future of Global Development, Research on globalization, Vo-2, Dec.2020)

China's assertiveness in the field of global development poses a direct challenge to traditional donors, such as the US and UK, as well as international financial institutions such as the World Bank (Mawdsley, 2019). China also sought to increase its influence around the world through mask diplomacy as well as vaccine supplies. Whenever there was criticism of the Corona Mausoleum spreading around the world, China responded aggressively. The Corona Great Depression hit China's economy early on. But then China's economy not only recovered but also grew. As the world's economies continue to decline, so does China's economy.

Conclusion

Thus, the impact of Covid 19 on world politics will change the picture of world politics after this epidemic. International politics issues always divided into high and low politics. The pandemic covid-19 has transformed public health into an area of high politics. Talking about international organizations, we can say that they have pay no effective role.

Due to globalization, the legs of every country are stuck in each other. However, to some extent, each country will have to become self-sufficient (to deal with such an epidemic), a demand that now seems to be gaining momentum in every country.
